

MUST SEE ART

BY AMRA BROOKS

Wednesday, December 13, 2006 - 11:00 am

Anna Sew Hoy, Julia Kunin, Sterling Ruby and Tiago Carneiro da Cunha at Karyn Lovegrove Gallery

Most of the sculpture in this group show, with the exception of Brazilian artist Tiago Carneiro da Cunha, who works with resin, is ceramic. Anna Sew Hoy's work has matured into knots that evoke a crude but complex geometry coupled with organic elements like braided hair or cotton fabric. Brooklyn-based artist Julia Kunin creates towerlike sculptures of insects and sea life forming precarious tumbleweeds of antennae, claws and wings. Kunin plays with the line between the grotesque and the delicate, and all the works in the show breathe life into a once passé medium.
