

artnet®

ARMORY SHOW 2012

by Rachel Corbett

Cameron Martin and Kanishka Raja works at Greenberg Van Doren at the Armory Show 2012

At Greenberg Van Doren Gallery, a single or two-person show has long been the norm. This year the front half of the booth is devoted to Brooklyn artist Cameron Martin, and by mid-afternoon the gallery had already sold a few of his white-veiled photorealist landscape paintings for $10,000-$20,000 each. These pale beauties contrasted sharply with works by Kanishka Raja, whose neon Bollywood-inspired panel paintings in the back had yet to find homes at $4,000 to $20,000 a pop.